Flight to Safety

Anti-Replicant League: Scenario Three
by Thomas Todd

With the loss of life from the Meta Plague that had swept across the globe many military and law enforcement units were strengthened with replicants, generously provided by R.I.P. at low prices.

As a result, when the Replicants rose in rebellion, military installations, police stations and government buildings were destroyed or taken by replicants already in place.

Because Albert Prentice was an ARL member the Prentice Complex in Londonderry did not have any replicants within its boundaries.

As one of the few safe havens in the city, refugees sought refuge within its walls.

As the day drew on the numbers of replicants converging on the complex increased and access from outside became more difficult.

Prentice, a humanitarian, was forced to send some of his own corporation troops out to aid the refugees as they fled to the complex.

This scenario follows the plight of a number of groups, civilian and military, seeking refuge in the Prentice Complex.

The Refugee groups

Objective: To enter the Prentice Complex alive.

Soldiers

This group has fled the local barracks which was destroyed during the night when the ammunition and arms depot was blown up by replicants. Carrying whatever arms they could salvage, they are ill-equipped to face Replicants.

Street Gang

The streets have become a dangerous place and the gang has decided to leave their usual haunts which were being over-run by replicants.

Prentice's Corporate Troops

Tac Squad 1: 5 men, average quality
Comm units, Combat Suits
2 Max 40 assault rifles
2 autopistols
1 missile launcher with 3 HE missiles

Tac Squad 2: 5 men, average quality
Comm units, Combat Suits, one frag grenade each

The Replicants

Objectives: To reduce the number of humans available to defend the Prentice Complex.

- 6 Mitchell Steiner 5000 Class Replicants with assault rifles
- 2 Mitchell Steiner 5000 Class Replicants with autocannons
- 2 Mitchell Steiner 5000 Class replicants with assault cannons

Table Set up

The table should be set up as urban terrain with wire mesh fence stretching across one end of the table 10 cm from the edge. This represents the outer edge of the Prentice Complex.

There should be an entrance 20 cm wide representing the gate into the complex.

Refugees are to attempt to enter the complex through this gate while corporate troops will exit the complex through this gate. Replicants will not enter through the gate in this scenario.

Terrain should be set up on such a way that there are at least two clear roads leading to the Prentice Complex with access to the gate. Three roads are better if the playing surface and terrain allows for this.

The refugees forces start 10 cm in from their board edge.

The replicant player may start with 6 replicants 10 cm in from the two edges allotted to him. (Marked xxxxx) He may split them between these edges as he sees fit.

The remaining four replicants will enter along the edge allotted to the refugees at the start of turn two. The corporate forces are diced for at the start of each turn and require the following rolls on a D6 to enter in that turn.

- Start of turn one: die roll of 6
- Start of turn two: Die roll of 5,6
- Start of turn three: Die roll of 4, 5, 6
- Start of turn four: Automatically arrive

Special Rules

It may be easier for the replicant player to divide his forces into three or four groups at the start of the game and activate them in these groups. Otherwise they should continue to be treated as individual models.

No-one may shoot into or out of the Prentice Complex in this scenario. All figures who enter the Prentice Complex are considered as safe.

The corporate and refugee players should keep a note of which refugee figures manage to enter the complex and which corporate figures are lost.

The refugees rescued will be used to assist on the defence of the complex in a later scenario while the corporate figures lost will not be present for that scenario. If this is played as a single scenario then the victory conditions are as follows:

If more than half of the refugees enter the Prentice complex then the human forces win.

If less than half of the refugees enter the Prentice Complex then the replicants win.
